

TRAINING EVALUATION and MEASUREMENT -sample forms

Training Evaluation & Measurement-sample forms Almost all Organizations use post-training forms to be completed by attendees to evaluate the effectiveness of the training. In reality, these are NOT evaluation forms; not even assessment Forms! The forms used are what LSOM refers to as Reaction Forms or, what the trainees think about the training. Instead of focusing on the objectives of the training, the training is evaluated on how entertaining the Trainer was in the dissemination (of the contents). For training to be effective, Organizations must differentiate between the following: Assessment Evaluation Validation Assessment and Evaluation is synonymous when the training is used to determine and reinforce what is done well and what needs to be improved against a standard. Assessment determines a rate or amount of activity to measure trainee activity whereas Evaluation determines the significance, worth or judgment of training. Validity is closely related to Evaluation because it is a measurement of how much the trainees work performance has improved as a consequence of the training. A simple validation is to relate the trainees assessment of the Course against the pre-course Training Assessment form i.e. if the objectives defined in the pre-course Assessment form are met with the results, as measured by the rating of the completed Assessment Forms by the trainees. However, it is best to validate the training, on the job, after a defined period of time, after the conclusion of training. This book does not discuss the differences of the three terms mentioned above. The objective is clear: provide readers with a number of training forms which Trainers (particularly external trainers) can use, when conducting training seminars. Most of the forms are reaction forms with a potpourri of assessment and evaluation examples thrown in. LSOM recommends you, as the Trainer, blend the best elements from these forms to develop a training form which will meet your objective(s) for the specific training. Semantics is not as significant as the design of the form which will give you the end results you seek. CONTENTS include : Do trainers know how to evaluate the effectiveness of the trainer?
